Executive Summary

This page sets out Think Tank IGO's proposed commitment to openness about who it is, how it is governed and how it uses its resources. It describes the corporate, governance, financial and impact information the organization intends to publish so that members, clients and partners can make informed judgments.

Our Proposed Reporting Commitment

Think Tank IGO intends to develop reporting practices that help relevant stakeholders understand the organization's activities, governance and professional standards.

Corporate Information

Following establishment, appropriate public disclosures may include legal identity, registered location and official contact information.

Governance Reporting

The organization may publish summaries of its governance framework, ethical standards and material policy developments.

Financial Reporting

Financial statements and related disclosures will be prepared according to applicable legal and accounting requirements.

Membership Information

Aggregated membership information may be published where accurate, appropriate and consistent with privacy obligations.

Advisory Activity

The organization may report general categories of professional assignments and sector activity without disclosing confidential client information.

Research and Publications

Published research should identify authorship, relevant limitations and appropriate supporting information.

Social Impact Reporting

Approved humanitarian and knowledge initiatives should be reported with suitable financial and outcome information.

Conflicts and Related-Party Transactions

Material governance concerns should be handled through documented disclosure and approval procedures.

Accuracy

Public statements must not exaggerate membership numbers, operational offices, client relationships, project results or institutional affiliations.

Corrections

Material errors in published information should be corrected appropriately.

Confidentiality

Transparency does not require the publication of confidential client records, private member data or commercially sensitive information.

Our Objective

To develop an institution whose public communications are accurate, accountable and proportionate to its responsibilities.

Key Takeaways

- Transparency is a stated commitment; most reporting practices described here are proposed, not yet in operation.
- Planned disclosures cover corporate identity, governance, finances, membership and social impact.
- The goal is to let outsiders verify claims rather than take them on trust.
- Reporting is intended to follow recognized good practice for private international organizations.
